“Anarkos”

Apuglia 2009

The project Racemi is dedicated to the research, vinification and international introduction of the ancient, native varietals and winemaking traditions of Apuglia. The idea originated with Gregory Perrucci, based on Primitivo di Manduria: the wine which brought the attention on what is now considered the most prestigious apulian vineyard. Study continues, thanks to the constant care of a young and motivated staff and the international consultancies the "tasting memory" exists for such varieties as negramaro, ottavianello, malvasia nera, sussumaniello.

The name “Anarkos” and its label protests some wine “Anarchy” in Apuglia. Some producers outside the zone have used Apulian grapes in production. Many of these names, such as "Primitivo", "Negramaro" and "Nero di Troia", can be found on labels of wines bottled outside Apulia. Apulia also lost the rights to thousands of hectares, those going to other regions causing the final extinction of several Apulian vineyards. This phenomenon effected small centuries-old vineyards planted according to the ancient Greek way.

These Apulian wine growers despise the annihilation of the uniqueness of their products. If this rich, full, fruity wine is also fine, smooth, elegant, palatable for everyone and above all with prices at everybody's reach, it works as a message, as a manifesto, as an evidence that needs to be handed down to support the people from Apulia together with their viticulture.
